Jenkins, Steve. What Do You Do When Something Wants To Eat You? Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company, 1997. Experience the roller coaster ride of intrigue and escape as the vibrant pages of this book come to life with each new danger. As the title suggests, this book explores many interesting and unusual ways that equally interesting and unusual animals avoid becoming a predator's dinner. The Basilisk Lizard, for example, narrowly escapes the beak of a vicious-looking heron by running across the water's surface. This unique talent has earned it the nickname "Jesus Christ Lizard" in his native country of South America. Other animals featured in this selection are the puffer fish, the blue-tongued skink, and the hog-nosed snake. The textured, vividly colorful, and eye-catching illustrations compliment the story as each of the fourteen predators face off against their potential prey. Parents will like that the book is educational, and children will find it entertaining.

Although intended for children, this book is for anyone from age 4 to 104 who enjoys learning about animals.

My 6 year old and 4 year old loved this book and spent many hours acting out the "predator vs prey" scenarios and drawing pictures of the animals.

One of my children has an absolute terror of being eaten. I had no idea until we read this storybook. Yikes. It's not an unreasonable fear; it was just another surprise. Children are very surprising. This book by Steve Jenkins is cleverly written and illustrated with magnificent cut paper collages. Our favorite was the basilisk. Great book.

One of our favorite stories. Personally I am not a fan of the pictures, they are kind of odd collage type pictures but my five year old doesn't seem to mind. It's a great story and he picks it over and over for bedtime.

My 5yr old daughter loves Steve Jenkin books. We have about 6 and have gotten every one the local library has. I love how often in his book he has several levels for learning. I think of these as science books for kids- that kids will love!

My 9-year-old daughter loves it. According to me this is too easy for her, but she was very excited to learn many new things and she insisted on reading them to me. If your kid loves animals, they will definitely love this book.

My five year old loved it, particularly the lizard that could run on water. He is now using my treadmill to see how fast he can run, wanting to be able to run fast enough that he also can run on water!
